

Medical Fitness

SEC recognizes that on occasion, employees may experience health conditions that prevent them from attending work. Should an employee's health or frequency of absences from work become a cause for concern, administration may require additional medical information from the employee including a physical or psychiatric examination by a duly qualified medical practitioner acceptable to SEC.

The information requested will be general in nature regarding the illness or disability and will focus upon and verify the prognosis or expectation for recovery and the possible date for return to work.

The cost of any examination will be paid by SEC.
